WOODBIDGE RIVER PASSAGE

Heards Brook Trailhead

The Woodbridge River Passage connects the many open spaces and unique habitat areas found along the Woodbridge River and its surrounding floodplain. Visitors can walk, jog, and bike along nearly four miles of multi-use paths and trails running through woodlands, meadows, tidal marshes and other natural habitats. Portions of the Passage have been restored from previous development to native habitat to protect adjoining neighborhoods from the impacts of storms, flooding and tidal surges.

At the Heards Brook trailhead, enjoy the restored meadow habitat where flood-impacted homes have been replaced with native grasses, sedges, and wildflowers. This vegetation provides additional flood storage capacity for the neighborhood, increasing community resiliency against climate change induced storm impacts. These habitats also increase biodiversity, making the Woodbridge River Passage a great place to view wildlife.
